

Pres. Harding Won't Cut Tariff Rates

May Mean Serious Injury to Domestic Industry, He Believes—Useless to Reduce Sugar Duty.

(By GRAFTON WILCOX.)
Copyright 1923, Chicago Tribune.
WASHINGTON, June 1.—As a protectionist, President Harding will take no chances on injuring business through unnecessary reductions in tariff rates, it was declared today at the White House.

The President is firmly convinced that it would be useless to cut the duty on sugar. It is his opinion that a reduction in duty would not affect the price of sugar to any material extent and that serious injury might be done to the domestic industry.

The President held conferences during the day with the two protectionist members of the tariff commission, Thomas O. Marvin, chairman, and William Burgess. While nothing was made public regarding the details of their discussions it was understood that they talked over various proposed and pending investigations. It is known that the commission is about to send to the President suggestions for investigation of the duties on the commission under the flexible provisions of the tariff law. His approval being necessary before inquiries not based upon applications are embarked upon.

The President will be called upon to consider the desirability of at least one and probably several of these proposed investigations before leaving upon his Alaskan trip. Whether or not he will actually approve any of them at this time is uncertain.

Following the conferences with members of the commission it was declared that the President is well satisfied with its work. Both the President and the commission are desirous of making the flexible tariff fully effective and not to allow it to become a dead letter. It is the President's view, however, that the purpose of Congress in authorizing the executive to increase or decrease rates of duty was to make possible adjustments consistent with the protective doctrine and that it was not expected that any action would be taken which would injure an American industry. Hence there is no intention to reduce all duties which in some quarters may be considered too high.

The President, in accordance with this theory of a flexible tariff, desires the tariff commission to proceed with investigations from two standpoints, the effect of foreign competition upon American production and whether or not tariff rates are unduly burdensome upon the American consumer.

Kilbane-Criqui Fight Creating Much Interest

(By The Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, June 2.—The contract for the featherweight championship for the world in the Polo Grounds between Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, and Eugene Criqui, of Paris, stands as one of the most interesting in the absorbing records of pugilism. A crowd of 60,000 is expected to see the battle. Kilbane is witty, brash, fast and clever. Criqui, a genuine Parisian, a soldier who for his country is smart, quick and hard hitting. Both are old as ring gladiators go. Kilbane, confessing to 34 and Criqui to 29. Kilbane weighed 128 pounds, one pound under the limit when examined today; Criqui weighed 123 1-2. Both were found fit.

Scupping of Morganton, 22, who was graduated in the electrical engineering department of North Carolina state college today, died of injuries suffered last night in an automobile accident near Mount Holly. REALIZES HIS AMBITION FOR ALL-AMERICAN ORCHESTRA

NEW YORK, June 2.—An all-American orchestra will play on a national scale, from first violinist to trombone player—Americans all.

What is said to be the first orchestra answering this description, which will play on a national scale, is now preparing to tour the country.

The organizer is the conductor—Howard Barlow, and it took him 10 long years to fulfill his dream of an orchestra of Americans for Americans.

Barlow is a native of Denver, Colo. He came here ten years ago with his idea. But no one would listen, and he had to have financial backing.

By persistence and plugging away he has gathered about him enough lovers of music with means to start. His finished orchestra is the answer.

Recently he gave an initial concert. Only 100 were invited, and the affair was supposed to be rather secret. But some New York critics managed to squeeze their way in, and their subsequent praise was long and loud.

One of the announced features of the national tour is its purpose of developing musical talent while en route through the country. Financial gain for anyone, or any group, is taboo.

"European orchestras," says Barlow, "provide a means of expression for the native art of European countries. We propose to provide such an opportunity for native American musicians. This orchestra is pledged to the belief that the path of great international art is through great national art."

Leaksville Tax Collector Pays Dearly For a Telephone Call

L. M. Sheffield, tax collector of Leaksville, N. C., considers that he paid as dearly as any man ever paid for a short telephone conversation in his office a few days ago.

Sheffield was in his office and had taken out his pocket portfolio containing $3,000 in money and checks when the telephone bell rang. He left the wallet on the table and answered the call. When he hung up the receiver he found that the wallet and its contents were missing. The amount, stolen was represented by checks.

Three or four persons were in the office at the time and they have expressed a good deal of embarrassment. They have all been questioned but are as much in the dark as to the missing pocketbook as Sheffield himself. The tax collector is offering a liberal reward not only for the return of the wallet and its contents but also for information leading to the apprehension of the thief.

The checks have been stopped and it is understood that about half the amount stolen was represented by checks.

Freed of Wine Charge Because Of Repeal Bill

Judge Discharges Man Who Had 110 Gallons on the Grounds Court Had no Jurisdiction.

(By The Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, June 2.—Gennaro Colongioni, arrested last night charged with possessing 110 gallons of wine, was discharged today by Judge Goodman on the grounds that the courts had no jurisdiction since the arrest was made after Governor Smith signed the repeal of the Mulford act. The repeal of the law was signed by Governor Smith on June 1, 1923. The case was heard in the court of the Mulford act, which was repealed. The judge found that the court had no jurisdiction over the case because the law had been repealed before the arrest was made.

MAY RESULT IN DRIVE TO UPHOLD CONSTITUTION

(By The Associated Press.)
WASHINGTON, June 2.—While the federal government policy relative to prohibition enforcement in New York in view of the repeal of the state enforcement law remained to be determined, indications today were that it would take the form of a determined drive to uphold the constitution and the federal law in the state despite its refusal to aid. Though such a course might necessitate the depletion of prohibition forces elsewhere in order to concentrate a greater force in New York this was said to present the only alternative to continuing the present with the knowledge that it would be impossible to enforce the law rigidly alone.

EVIDENCES OF DEMOCRACY

(By The Associated Press.)
LONDON, June 2.—Two members of Britain's royal family already have appeared in the reviews, the Prince of Wales and Viscount Lascelles. Princess Alice, aunt of King George, recently used radio to broadcast an address to British women on the adoption of babies, and even the King and Queen are not immune to the modern trend, for they will soon make patriotic speeches into a phonograph and the records in large numbers will be distributed to the children of the country.

King George has a radio receiving set in his private apartments and some enthusiasts predict it will not be long before he establishes a royal sending station to gain intimate and cordial contact with his people.

Ball Players Are Fined $2.50 Each For Recent Fight

The cases of Ted Smith, Danville baseball player and James Teague, of the Greensboro club, charged with engaging in a fight, were disposed of this morning in the county court with imposition of fines of $2.50 each with the costs divided. Teague was not present but Smith stepped forward and announced that he wished to submit both cases, stating that he would pay both fines. He said that it was one of those disputes which invariably arise in a baseball game but that he and Teague now were on the best of terms.

The warrants were the result of a fight on Wednesday morning during the game between Danville and Greensboro clubs. Smith had singled. He went down in an effort to steal second. The batsman fouled and Smith was forced to return to first. When he passed Teague who was playing second, something was said, and the passage of blows started. Neither got in a good blow and no injuries resulted.

Fines of $2.50 each were imposed on H. B. Kent and A. L. Shelton with the costs divided. The men being charged with engaging in a fight. They submitted to the charges paying the fines. It was not revealed what the fight was over of just what took place, although Shelton appeared in court with a wound on the back of the head.

Thomas Shelton drew a fine of $10 for costs for operating an automobile while under the influence of whisky.

George King was fined five dollars and costs for operating a machine on the wrong license plate.

Arraigned For Cruelty To Frogs

(By Chicago Tribune Service.)
CHICAGO, June 1.—"A frog is a firmisternal, tail-less amphibious animal," declared Judge Richardson, of the Municipal Court, "and is entitled to protection under the statutes of Illinois."

This decision came in the suit brought by the Anti-Cruelty Association against E. R. Nuefeldt, a commission merchant, charged with contributing to the delinquency of frogs for reasons for the anti-cruelty society found that Nuefeldt had been arbutuating the hind legs of frogs and then tossing what was left in a tub to die in torture after two or three days.

"Frogs are not animals they are only fish and insensible to pain," retorted Nuefeldt. "They have a tremendous 'come-back' and frequently revive after they have been apparently dead for hours. Besides they are used to having their hind legs cut off. They die anyhow if you give them time."

"Well, hereafter, you will cut off their heads," threatened them of their heads "in a human manner," ordered the judge, who continued the case to June 15, to permit the anti-cruelty society and Nuefeldt to agree upon the method of killing frogs which are deprived of their hind legs.

BRINDELL FINED THIRTY DAYS OF HIS GOOD TIME

NEW YORK, June 2.—Robert P. Brindell's suspicious meeting with his family on Sunday evening, when he was last seen, was heavily paid for.

The Warden's Court, consisting of the Warden, Principal Keeper and senior physician, yesterday sentenced Brindell to thirty days of his good time for failure to appear for a forfeiture of thirty days. He had been transferred to Clinton Prison already.

Reduction to second grade was ordered. Brindell may receive half as many visitors and letters as first grade men—and a Dannemore even first grade men do not receive all the privileges of the same class at Sing Sing.

Still further punishment can be inflicted. Prison regulations say visitors who violate the rules may be banned from further visits. This regulation may be invoked against Brindell, who is a doctor and physician, if he violates the rules.

Only one Sing Sing attendant, Keeper Andrew Carson, has been suspended in the investigation. Wardens Lawes and Parsons are the two men who have been charged in this case have not come forward to tell him what they knew.

Child Has a Close Call in Three-Story Fall

(Copyright 1923, Chicago Tribune.)
NEW YORK, June 1.—Mrs. Mamie O'Donnell was doing the washing today—she was hanging out there six and all of them little—and when the witchen, on the third floor, in Yorkville, became overheated she threw open the door and placed a chair there to keep the young ones in.

Mamie O'Donnell sings while she works, for Tor is an iron worker and doing well, and they all have their health. While the baby sat in his high chair and he was away with a spoon, Miss Mamie O'Donnell, aged two, climbed under the chair and up two flights to the roof.

On a roof across the street two boys were busy with their pigeons. They saw Mamie O'Donnell's chair standing on the very edge of the roof. The boys yelled to her to stand back but she gave them no heed. And the next thing anyone knew the girl baby was tumbling head over heels away with a bang. The chair had been heard in the street. Eight or ten persons were gathered below. The baby landed on the awning over a vegetable stand, bounced once, struck again on the edge of the awning and tumbled off into the capable arms of Frank La Barbera. Policeman Driscoll of the East 67th street station carried her to the drug store across the way. Dr. Zida came and examined her. She was taken to Hospital but it was found the child had only wrenched her right wrist when she struck the awning and otherwise was unhurt.

Half an hour later, Miss Margie was taking a nap.

Trucks Reduce Cost of Oats

(By The Associated Press.)
WASHINGTON, June 2.—Production of oats in the United States probably has reached its highest point, in the opinion of experts of the Department of Agriculture.

The yearbook of the department for 1922 declares the advent of motorized trucking, both in city and country, and of the tractor on the farm, has reduced markedly the commercial demand for feeding oats. The result, it is predicted, will be to reduce acreage and production, which have increased rapidly and consistently since 1886, and that the crop now ranks third in importance, the cereals being next to corn and wheat.

The importance of barley, which ranks fourth among cereals in this country, is increasing even though production is not. The average annual production of barley for the ten years ended in 1922 was about 193,000,000 bushels. The future outlook for this crop is said to be encouraging.

Rye is listed as an unimportant crop in this country, but there has been an increase in production since 1912, due to an increased European demand, which is expected to disappear later in large measure.

Misfortune Still Brooding Over Pillow Family; Husband Succumbs

The fourth victim in the Reidsville, N. C., grade crossing fatality which took place last Thursday evening, remained in a Greensboro hospital early this morning. J. W. Pillow, father of James and Birdie Pillow who were instantly killed, succumbed to cranial injuries. He had remained unconscious since the accident and doctors had from the first thought his chance of recovery was slight.

The body was sent to Reidsville this morning and the burial probably will be held on Sunday afternoon.

Residing in the home of Mrs. Thomas Mitchell, Pillow's married daughter who came to see, did not suffer the serious injuries sustained by her mother and whose recovery is now expected. Mitchell remains in the Greensboro hospital.

In the meantime misfortune broods in other ways over the unfortunate family. Mrs. J. W. Pillow, who on successive days saw the bodies of her two dead children and learned of the death of her father-in-law, Irvin Pillow, and finally that of her husband, early today, is in serious condition from the mental shock of the catastrophe, which has decimated her family.

Residing in this neighborhood, her children are seriously ill with measles and complications.

R. E. L. SCHOOL FINALS HELD LAST NIGHT

One of the most interesting events of the present season of commencement was the closing exercises of the Robert E. Lee School, C. S. Wheatley principal, held last evening in the auditorium of Rison Park School, a large crowd attending. Dr. T. A. Smoot delivered an inspiring address.

Probably the most striking feature of the program was the children's chorus, made up of many of the school children. This chorus rendered a number of familiar songs. Miss Matie Brown, supervisor of music had the chorus in charge.

Other musical numbers on the program included solos by Misses Evelyn Mitchell and Gladys White and a violin duet by Miss Evelyn Gourley and Walter Ashworth.

Health certificates were given out to those pupils who had fulfilled the requirements as outlined at the beginning of the session.

The certificates of promotions were delivered to a large class of 82 (that compose the freshman class of the high school next session) by Superintendent W. C. Griggs. Prior to the delivery of the certificates Prof. Griggs made a pleasing and interesting talk.

PRICE OF COAL JUMPS OVER HALF IN GERMANY

BERLIN, June 1.—The price of coal throughout Germany will be increased 52 per cent beginning tomorrow in consequence of the further depreciation of the mark, and the increase in wages granted to the miners, it was announced today.

This increase will bring Ruhr coal to 221,000 marks a ton, as compared with about 137,000 marks a ton for English coal delivered at Hamburg. The retail price of German coal, however, will again be advanced shortly, due to a 40 per cent. increase in the freight rates, which also becomes effective tomorrow.

WIDOW TAKES CHILDHOOD GAME AND TURNS IT INTO SUCCESS

(Special to The Bee.)

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 2.—Games of her childhood have brought a widow success.

And they can bring it to others, too, says Mrs. Emily H. Drake, who has gone into a new kind of business, and made it pay from the very start.

As a youngster she liked to play house, cutting, painting and dressing her own paper dolls. When she grew up she became a school teacher.

"But I loathed teaching," she says. "So I went back to cutting and painting paper dolls. I sold many. Then my husband died, and I had to make my own living."

"I recalled having made a pair of rompers for a little nephew. They were of original design, and attracted attention in the little shop where I took them to be hemstitched."

"Why not make some for other children? I began, but then my father became ill and I had to break the few contacts I had made. I was discouraged. Then one day I read an article about Mrs. Mary Pauline Cleaver, called the 'Lady Cooey.' I wrote to her for advice."

"On her suggestion I had distinctive little cards printed, announcing my business of romper-making. I was soon flooded with orders. Now I have three women working for me."

BISHOP JETT'S FINE APPRECIATION OF MRS. J. E. B. STUART

In his annual report to the diocesan council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, which has just adjourned at Staunton, Bishop Robert Jett, who was for years rector of the Emmanuel church of Staunton, incorporated this fine appreciation of Mrs. J. E. B. Stuart, who then conducted the famous school in that city which was subsequently named for her.

"Mrs. Stuart was for years the able and successful principal of the Virginia Female Institute at Staunton. This institution was later renamed in her honor, Stuart Hall. She was as you well know, the widow of General J. E. B. Stuart. She was a woman of rare strength of character, and a Christian of distinctly saintly graces and habits. The impression her noble life will long be borne by her old girls, and all who came under her influence have been enriched by her gracious life. Her eighty-eight years were full of power for good. She was an exceptionally fine example of that type of womanhood which is the chief glory of the human family, without which this world would be poor indeed."

"Camp Oziza," the "Y. W." vacation camp, will be in readiness for campers in a few days. There has been delay in getting together some of the necessary equipment, and this has brought about a change in the camp schedule. The closing meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association for the summer will be held at Camp Oziza, so that the entire Board might see the attractive spot they have made possible for the girls of Danville. This will be served at the close of the business meeting by the camp committee, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, Mrs. S. E. Hughes, Mrs. L. O. Crumpler, Mrs. E. J. Hinchliffe and Miss Mary Bullington. The impression that Camp Oziza is for Y. W. C. A. girls only is erroneous. The camp is for any girl seeking a spot for her summer vacation or for a week-end rest. The real purpose of the camp is to bring together the young women of Danville for healthful recreation and fellowship. The rates are within the reach of all employed girls, and a hearty welcome and the happiest of times await any girl looking for a week or two in the out-of-doors. Folders are to be had at the Y. W. C. A. telling in detail all the needed information concerning Camp Oziza. All girls planning vacations at the Y. W. C. A. camp are urged to register as soon as possible. Fifty cents paid at the time of registration will secure accommodations at the camp.

QUICK ACTION BRAKES EXTRA LARGE AND EXTRA SAFE

In the construction of Dodge Brothers Motor Car, every consideration has been given to the owner's safety.

This is particularly evident in the brakes, which, with their 14-inch drums and 2 1/4 inch lining, are appreciably larger than the average. The extra surface thus provided develops greater friction when the brake bands contract over the drums—and it is this friction which stops the car.

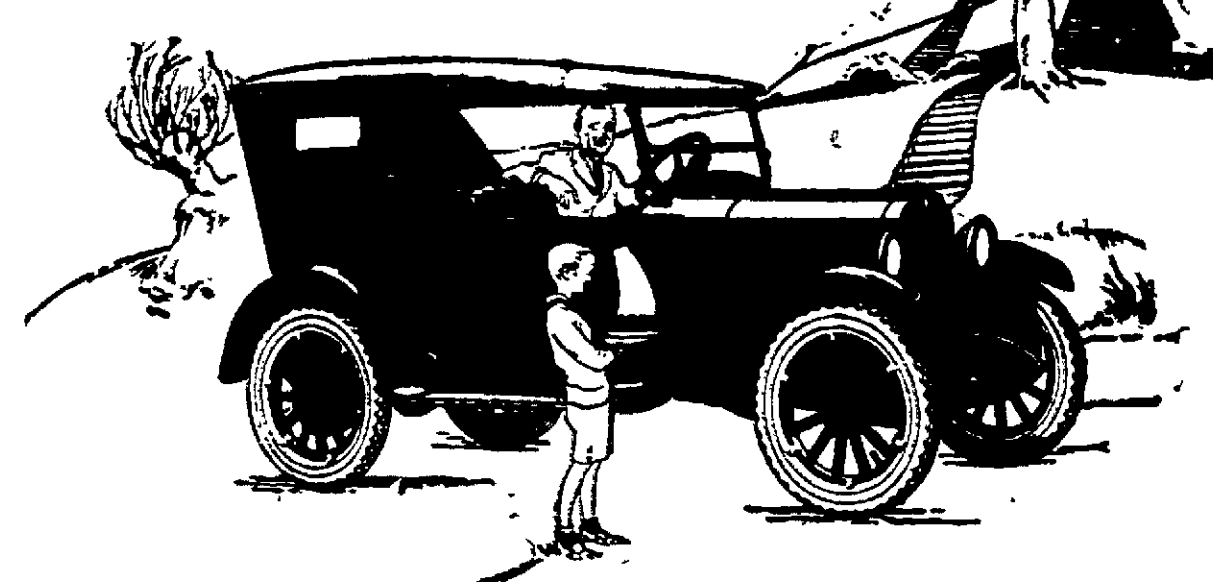

Connecting levers are designed to transmit the maximum of power with the minimum of effort. The slightest pressure on the brake pedal has an immediate effect. This pressure is distributed evenly between the two rear wheels by a highly efficient equalizer, which prevents skidding because it retards both wheels simultaneously.

And the brake bands grip evenly all around the drums. This protects the lining against irregular wear and enables the driver to stop quickly, quietly and safely.

Gov. Smith Signs Repeal Measure

Action Wipes Prohibition State Law From Books— Says Action Was in Interest of State Rights.

(By ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.)

(Copyright 1923, Chicago Tribune.)

ALBANY, N. Y., June 1.—Governor Smith today signed the Culliver bill repealing the Mullan-Cage state prohibition enforcement law.

In wiping the state law from the statute books the governor issued a lengthy statement explaining that he takes this step in the interest of state rights, but that the federal prohibition law remains in force in New York that will be strictly enforced by the New York law officers.

Of preponderant interest and significance, however, is that part of the executive statement which sounds a call for a new policy in prohibition enforcement representing a middle of the road course between the fanatical wet and the fanatical dry.

In a declaration which will be regarded the platform on which he will become a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, Governor Smith proposes that the states be permitted to define intoxicating liquor so that some states may have light wines and beer while others may, if they choose, be as dry as the Volstead act.

The governor said that the whole treatment of the prohibition question has been "marked by hypocrisy," and that the country is looking for a new deal that will disregard the fanatics on both sides.

He denies emphatically that he advocates anything "infringing upon the provisions of the eighteenth amendment," but he regards the one-half of one percent alcoholic content definition of intoxicating liquor in the Volstead act as dishonest and nonsensical. That definition he believes was written by the fanatical dry in defiance of the "general excitement of mankind," and he thinks that common sense backed up by "good medical opinion" would produce a "more scientific" definition.

"Such a definition," said the governor, "should be adopted by Congress as a proper and reasonable amendment of the Volstead act and a maximum alcoholic content should be prescribed by Congress which would limit all states to the traffic in liquor which is a fact non-existent within the meaning of the 18th amendment. Subject to that limitation each state should thereafter be left free to determine for itself what should constitute an intoxicating beverage."

The governor denies that the repeal amounts to state nullification of federal law. The action does not abrogate the Volstead act or infringe the Eighteenth amendment, he maintains. The repeal "will not make legal a single act which was illegal during the period of the existence of the statute."

With the state law wiped out it will not be legal to manufacture, sell or distribute intoxicating liquor in New York, the governor asserts, for such will still be a violation of the federal law. The repeal "will not bring back light wines and beer."

There will still remain, the governor contends, "the sacred responsibility" resting upon the state's peace officers "of sustaining the Volstead act with as much force and as much vigor as they would enforce any state law," and he intends, he says, to see that they do their duty in this respect.

Nor will the repeal, says the governor, bring back the saloon, "which is and ought to be defunct institution in this country."

Specifying what the repeal will accomplish the governor says it will do away with the possibility of double jeopardy for the same offense under state and federal prohibition statutes and will "bring into harmony" the recent decision of United States District Judge Knox who held invalid the limitation on the prescription of liquor by physicians.

Those who are wet or moist or in any degree yearning for a return of the good old days when one could get a non-poisonous drink with a kick in it are delicious with joy tonight over the action of Al Smith and the hopes he inspires of eventual modifications of the Volstead act. From the Metropolis come tidings that pangs of praise to Smith are being sung from the east side "sidewalks of New York" to Riverside Drive.

Nothing is too good for Al now, you can take it from the wets. He can have anything he wants if they can get it for him. He becomes at once a highly favored candidate in moist places for the presidency not only because, in signing the Culliver repeal, he has done what the wets wanted and what members of the legislature representing 70 per cent of the people wanted but because he has championed a concrete program for tempering the rigors of the Volstead act. With a stroke of his pen, the governor placed himself in the forefront of the field of candidates for the Democratic nomination for President. There is no doubt that he will go to the national convention of his party as the choice, not only of New York but of some other states desiring modification of the Volstead act and the second choice of still other states. He will be a formidable candidate for the nomination and the natural leader of the forces which will put up the most stubborn fight for a beer and light wine plank in the Democratic platform that ever has been witnessed in a national convention. The fight is now on and in the next year a good deal of fur is going to fly.

The dries are consumed with wrath at the repeal of the state enforcement law and are vowing vengeance upon Governor Smith and every state senator and assemblyman who voted for the Culliver bill. The leaders of the dry organizations headed by the Anti-Saloon league are already sounding the call to battle in the election of the legislature next fall and in the national and state elections next year. One of the possible candidates for the Republican nomination for governor upon whom they look with signal favor is United States District Attorney William H. Hays who made the most impressive appeal for veto of the repealer at the hearing here yesterday.

Many are the predictions heard here that the repeal of light wine and beer will be the paramount issue in the presidential election next year with President Harding the champion of the dries and the Democratic candidate, whether he be Smith or another, the champion of the wet.

The action of New York in wiping out its state prohibition enforcement act is expected by the wets to act as a example for other states which desire to register their protest against the Volstead law and crystallize the sentiment in favor of its modification.

In justifying his approval of the repeal Governor Smith said that the Eighteenth Amendment imposes upon no state the obligation to adopt as state law the provisions of the Volstead Act.

The governor denies that the repeal amounts to state nullification of federal law. The action does not abrogate the Volstead act or infringe the Eighteenth amendment, he maintains. The repeal "will not make legal a single act which was illegal during the period of the existence of the statute."

TALKS IN BILLIONS BUT HE'S STRANGER IN HOME TOWN

BY DON P. DEBOHAN

(Special to The Bee.)

SILVER CREEK, N. Y., June 2.—

John W. Slack started out as a $14 a week office boy—

Now he talks in billions

His bid of $1,061,000,000 for all the shipping board's vessels startled the whole country. But it created more excitement than a cyclone right here in his home town.

For Silver Creek, with its 3,300 souls, doesn't know Slack.

True, most folks recognize him and pass the time of day when they meet him on the street. Others, there are, who can scarcely tell you where he lives.

Substantial Citizen.

"Oh, yes, he's a substantial citizen," some of the older business men will inform you. "Nice fellow, but rather quiet."

"He's been here eight years now, but we don't know any more about him than we did the first week. He's president of the Columbia Postal Supply Company, and makes some sort of stamp canceling machines for the government."

And that's the little one-story yellow brick building down the street. Well, that's his office.

And they point to a tiny factory, just half a block from the park, or square.

A clerk in a drug store directed us to Slack's home. It's a modest, though substantial, frame dwelling on Central avenue, "last house before you come to the railroad tracks."

Puts Town on Map.

Slack, daughter, Ethel, 20, came to the door.

"Dad's out riding," she announced. "But he'll come in soon."

An hour later the visitor returned and found Slack sitting in his study, one of his Packards (he has two).

"Going down to the office for a little bit," he explained. "Jump in."

"Pretty nice little place. 'Any way from the noise and city."

"Looks like me," put it on the map. You know I'm on the Chamber of Commerce publicity committee."

But He Won't Tell.

"Now, Mr. Slack, about the dollars a lot of money. Where you going to get that much?"

"Well, son, I can't tell you now. When Lasker says the word go I'll be only too glad to let the country in on the secret."

"And what are you going to do with all those boats?"

"Well, we'll keep them running. We can't mess things up any more than the government has done. That's about all I can say about our plans just now."

Lasker is reported as saying the ships aren't worth what we're bidding. But, you see, we don't want to sting them."

He's Only 45.

The car had reached the office. Inside, Slack fumbled through personal mail, as the interviewer determined whether he smoked, played golf, intended to remain in Silver Creek and how much he slept.

He said he didn't smoke, didn't play golf, slept plenty and would remain in his home here.

Slack gave his banking connections as the First National Bank of Silver Creek and the Silver Creek National Bank. He wouldn't say how much his checking account totaled.

He invited the interviewer to have dinner with him. Then he proposed to drive to Forestdale, five miles from here. But both invitations had to be declined on account of catching a train.

THE OLD HOME TOWN

By Stanley Says Turks Are Scorning Them

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS

SCUTARI, Asia Minor, June 2.—The "Barge of Death" story has just been told me and I shall tell it here because it is a picture of what happens to plain people when folks like these go to war.

It is another story of Greek refugees who fled from their homes in Asia Minor in fear of the massacring Turks.

The steamer Gul Jemal, carrying 4,000 Greek refugees, arrived in the Bosphorus off here, smallpox and typhus rampant among the ragged lot. After lying there for a week, the ship was ordered by the Turks to move on to Touliza where there is a disinfecting station.

Some 200 of the worst cases, however, were taken off the ship and put on a barge, to be towed to a Greek hospital. This hospital, however, was already so full that several patients were obliged to lie in the same bed. Yet the Turks persisted.

Ghostly Cargo Afloat.

So, off the hospital, the barge—just a flat, uncovered barge like they haul dirt or coal or garbage in, un-protected from the elements by even a tarpaulin—lay with its ghastly cargo of dead and dying.

Four bodies were taken off there, and then, the Greeks, hoping to take the Turks to task for the patients at their hospital at Haidar, had the barge towed over there.

Some 24 hours later the barge was still there—minus, however, 15 more of its cargo. These had died during the day. The rest lay waiting for death, unattended, uncared for, any more than if they had been a cargo of refuse from the city dump.

British Bring Aid.

The first help which ultimately came to these poor people, mostly women and children, was from a British warship which sent a party of bluejackets over, with water and soup and a canvas over the barge of death. Ultimately, I understand, the remnant were taken off by the American Near East Relief

Tax Payments In N. C. Slow

(By The Associated Press)
RALEIGH, N. C., June 2.—The collection of approximately $3,200,000 in state income tax is expected to be increased, but the total amount of funds from this source cannot be estimated, according to officials of the North Carolina Revenue Department today.

For the past several weeks tax payments have been slow in coming in and the figure has remained around $2,200,000, it was stated. The budget commission, in its report to the general assembly last winter, stated the collections from income tax would reach $3,500,000. Officials of the revenue department could not state today whether this figure would be reached.

A concerted drive for all tax dodgers has been planned by Commissioner of Revenue Doughton, a conference having been held in Raleigh recently to devise methods of detecting those who have failed to make returns. All records of the federal internal revenue department, Raleigh, are available to the state officials in making these investigations.

An announcement of Gilliam Grissom, United States Internal Revenue Collector for North Carolina, to the effect that approximately $125,200,000 already had been collected in federal revenue in this state during eleven months of the fiscal year 1923, was published today. The figures compare with $122,413,330 for the whole of the fiscal year 1922, according to the collector.

A total of approximately $125,000,000 is expected to be collected in this state in 1923, according to Mr. Grissom, who added that North Carolina probably would rise from eighth place in standing with other states, California being the state expected to be ousted.

PORK MOST POPULAR OF MEATS IN U. S.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Pork and lard are two of the largest items in the food supply of the American people. The average annual per capita consumption for the last five years was 67.3 pounds of pork and 12.5 pounds of lard, as compared with 60.9 pounds of beef. In several recent years the consumption of pork alone has exceeded that of all other meats combined.

A study of the hog production industry included in the 1922 yearbook of the Department of Agriculture shows that among the farm animals hogs are exceeded in numbers only by cattle, and in value only by cattle and horses. They are produced on four-fifths of the farms of the country and represent over ten per cent of the value of the nation's agricultural production.

Nearly two-thirds of the commercial production of pork is in the corn belt. The amount of corn marketed in the form of hogs varies annually from 30 to 40 per cent of the entire crop. Pork exports represent about 20 per cent of the country's agricultural exports and have held the highest place in foreign trade ever since colonial days. In 1790, the first year for which data are available, there was exported approximately 6,000,000 pounds of pork and pork products.

Only 8.5 per cent of the hogs on American farms are registered pure bred, and about three-fourths of the total are raised for the market. Cholera is still the most important disease among hogs and takes the highest toll. In 1922 more than 2,700,000 hogs died of the disease, causing a financial loss of approximately $28,000,000.

England's Largest Bombing Plane Ready for Trial Flight

LONDON, June 1.—England's largest airplane, a huge bomber built in secret for the Air Ministry, will soon be given its trial flight.

According to the Daily Express, the big plane is built entirely with the engine installed in a cabin completely armored against machine guns. The engine room will be in charge of a mechanic, thus leaving the pilot free to operate the lifting and steering devices without regard to engine details.

ROME, June 1.—With an army of 200,000 athletes from which to choose the 1924 American Olympic team, the United States is in the most formidable position of all the competing countries and looks like the sure winner of the Paris Olympiad next year, according to General Sherrill, the old Yale star and originator of the "couch start," who is spending a few days in Rome after the meeting of the International Olympic Committee.

"We have to beat," said General Sherrill, "but we seem to have the best collection of athletes in the world, and there is no reason why we should not walk away with the honors. Just taking the collegians and universities alone, they present a formidable array of athletic possibilities."

"For the sprints, I think Paddock can be depended upon to take the prize from all comers," the General continued. "Then there is that wonderful Gourd, for the broad jump. No wonder he has the touch him. Young Weismuller in swimming will carry off all that he will be required to do."

"Both the army and navy are sending strong teams. In rifle work they will lead all the rest. Then in fencing and rowing, they are going to show up well. We also will have our team of winter sports, which will enter the events at Chamonix, France, next January. In games, the American amount association is interesting itself and will send a strong representation."

LETTER FROM LESLIE PRESCOTT TO LESLIE PRESCOTT, CARE OF THE SECRET DRAWER

I am going to deposit this letter from Sally Atherton in this little secret drawer and when I am inclined to think my lot is hard and when I find myself rebelling against my little annoyances, I am going to take it out and read it.

Strange, isn't it, that most women will face a great calamity when it comes into their lives just as bravely as the engineer installed in a cabin completely armored against machine guns.

Most of us feel daily against the little annoyances, which the so-called business of living rakes upon husband and wife and their love. These little everyday martyrdoms should be glided by love with the shining gold of forbearance.

Lovers as you know dear little Marjorie are never partners in the true sense of the word and most young people are greatly surprised when they find that marriage is a business part and simple.

I am going tomorrow to see Alice off and mother and dad are coming back with me.

I am going to make mother explain what she said in her last letter to me. I have always liked her and I believe that her letter has done his daughter more than that much good.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Calvin Gray, enemy of Colonel Henry Nelson, arrives in Dallas, Texas, to play a bud. He's quite a killer.

"Indeed?" "He kills Mexicans and niggers and folks without guns, mostly. Low-down stuff. He's got three or four, I believe. I never could see why the Nelsons kept him."

There was a brief silence. "He's been on the Nelson payroll for years—doing odd jobs that wasn't fit to be done. But I guess they got tired of him, anyhow he's been hanging around Wichita for the last two or three weeks. He's been in an out of our office quite a bit."

Later, when the journey was over and Tom Parker had been dropped at his gate, Gray spoke to his two companions. "Did you hear what he said?" "We did."

"It is lucky, indeed—for me. I'd have felt bound to make good his loss, if you had hooked him. I presume I ought to expose this swindle."

"Expose Jackson?" Stoner inquired, quickly. When Gray nodded, there was another brief silence before the speaker ventured to say: "I know this bird Nelson, and, take it from me, you're giving him the best of it. If I hadn't known him as well as I do, I wouldn't put in with you to break him. Now about this Jackson: you can land him, I s'pose, if you try, but it would be lower than a frog's foot, after him playing square with you."

"What do you mean by that?" "He could have stung you, easy, couldn't he? You surged out here on purpose to buy the lease, but he hid out all afternoon to avoid you."

"Um-m! Suppose we leave it for the present." Mallow, who had remained silent during his friend's argument, greeted this suggestion with relief. He was glad to change the subject.

"Good!" he cried heartily. "I'd about as soon face Old Tom Parker, like that fellow in the restaurant did, as to face Jackson. He'd sink a titlison in my head, sure, if—"

"Parker? Was that old man Miss Parker's father?" "Certainly! What d'you think I got the fu or something, all of a sudden? There ain't anybody left tough enough to handle Tom's tough old-timers, and he's deadly poison to the new crop."

For the first time Calvin Gray understood clearly the reason for the unexpected outcome of that encounter in the cafe. No wonder the stranger's trigger finger had been paralyzed. Barbara's father, indeed! How stupid of him not to guess.

"I must find him, quickly," Gray declared. "Perhaps he'll ride back to town with us."

It was not a difficult task to locate the veteran officer, and Tom was delighted at the chance to ride home with his new acquaintance.

A unique and an engaging person Parker proved to be: an old codger, of kindness and humor; a quiet, unassuming, stubborn, violent old man-at-arms, who would not be interrupted while he was eating. He was both scornful and contemptuous of evil-doers. All needed killing.

It was not a difficult task to locate the veteran officer, and Tom was delighted at the chance to ride home with his new acquaintance.

A unique and an engaging person Parker proved to be: an old codger, of kindness and humor; a quiet, unassuming, stubborn, violent old man-at-arms, who would not be interrupted while he was eating. He was both scornful and contemptuous of evil-doers. All needed killing.

"I say! Coverly was in a dlamay. 'Are you going to spoil the best sale I've made in two weeks?'"

"Oh, I'll take it off your hands, if he doesn't. Make some excuse not to deliver it until I say the word."

Gray knocked several times at the Governor's suite before a sleepy response, a succession of yawns and mutterings, told him that he had been heard. The door opened finally and the pride of the Briskow family, his eyes all but awaked, his muscular figure splendidly arrayed in futuristic silken pajamas, mumbled:

"What's eatin' you, any—?" The eyes opened wider. Buddy's face broke into a slow smile. "Why, Mr. Gray?" He extended a palm, a bitter grin and feverish, and drew his chair inside. "Dawg-gone! I'm glad to see you."

Buddy led the way into his bedroom, piled his pillows together and gingerly lowered himself upon them. He showed his strong white teeth in a wide grin and winked meaningly. "I'll be right directly. It's this here sim-sympathetic boogie they talk about. Have a drink, Mr. Gray? There's a couple bottles of real liquor in the closet—not this tiger's milk, you get—"

The caller declined the invitation. "Where the devil have you been, Buddy? We were getting worried. Buddy's face reddened, he dropped his eyes. "I don't mind tellin' you—I'm like this—I kinda got a girl."

"No!" The speaker was surprised. "Sure have. She's wonderful. She's right here in this hotel!" "Buddy, you're developin'!" Gray exclaimed, with apparent admiration.

"I've been showin' her the sights—that's what ails me this mornin'. She lets me take her around to places—trusts me, you understand? She thinks I'm ace."

"Splendid! I wish you'd ask her to dig up a friend."

"How d'you mean?" "Why, ask her to find another good-looking girl for me—I assume she is good-looking—she can make it a four-letter word. I'm a great entertainer, and while I don't drink, I haven't the slightest objection to ladies who do. Dallas, I believe, is a pretty lively—"

"She's a stranger here," Buddy broke in, stiffly. His enthusiasm had cooled; he regarded Gray with veiled displeasure. "An' besides, she ain't that kind of a girl."

"She's—what? I thought from what you said that headcase—bottles in your closet, too! My mistake, Buddy."

"I'm—Buddy gulped. "I'm goin' to marry her."

"Oh, fine!" Gray's enthusiasm was positively electric. He seized Buddy's hand and crushed it. "Education, indeed! No was for that now, is there?"

"I mean I'm goin' to, if I can; if she'll let me."

"Let you? With your money? Why, she'll jump at the chance. No doubt you have already asked her—or she suspects—"

The lad shook his head. "She don't have to marry nobody. She's got money—an estate."

"She's young, eh?"

"She's—well, I am. I reckon she's maybe twenty-five. I never eat her."

"Naturally. How did you meet her? When? Where? I'm a terribly romantic old fool." Gray yipped his chair closer and leaned forward, his face beaming with interest.

"Well, sir, it's a regular story. Like in a book. I was in a restaurant with a couple fellows at a table when I was struck her—"

"Struck her?"

"Yep. He was her brother, so she told me. Anyhow, I bounced him. I sure spoiled him up a lot. She was cryin' an' she est me to take her home. That's how I got to know her. I s'pose she cottoned to me for takin' her part that-way. She didn't know the sort of place it was down town. I took her home. For a kid she's had a hard time, an' every man she ever knew, but me, done her dirt. Even her husband." Buddy scowled.

"Forty-five hundred, and the value is there."

"Hold the ring. He may change his mind."

After a moment Gray said, quietly, "So, she's married?"

Athletic Honors Were Given Out

With the awarding of athletic and other honors, and the giving out of promotion cards in the auditorium yesterday morning, Danville high school came to a close after one of the most successful years in its history.

At the outset of the gathering in the auditorium, the principal made an interesting and inspiring talk on the work of the school and plans for its future. In the discussion he touched on the improvement to be made in the proposed bond issue. Miss Mary Proctor, coach for girls, then presented the basketball champion class, and the girls of the graduating class. Miss Mary Meade in behalf of the girls made a brief acceptance speech.

Dr. Joseph Dunsington of the First Presbyterian church, in the name of the Daughters of the American Revolution presented the prize for the best historic essay on "Virginia's part toward construction of the nation."

The honor went to Miss Evelyn Serice.

A present then was given to Mrs. Henry Leigh in the name of the graduating class in appreciation for her coaching of the high school play, "The Rivals." Principal Hall also presented with a token of their esteem.

Announcement was made that the Chatterbox, the high school weekly, was out and now on sale. The last number for this year contains a number of interesting facts about Danville and its organizations.

Following the exercises in the auditorium, each class went to its room, and there report cards and promotions were given out. Teachers said that the merchants that successfully passed all examinations this year was unusually large.

Traffic Problem Is Getting Worse

City traffic officers are doing their best to cope with a growingly serious problem on the city streets. This is the parking question which is daily growing more acute with the large increase in the city owned cars and the constantly growing number of transient cars which are to be found here.

More than two thousand license strips have been issued by the police authorities this year and though the city tobacco warehouses are helping to relieve the parking situation through the obliging readiness of their owners to permit their use for parking purposes it is becoming more and more difficult. In order to conform with the traffic ordinance the lower side of South Union street was reserved as to parking privileges.

Yesterday Police Officer E. G. Towell remained several hours on Market street, it having been now decided to enforce the traffic ordinance to the letter by allowing only one side to be used for parking. In order to be fair to the merchants on both sides, the ordinance provides that one side of the street alternate with the other and this month parking will be allowed on the West or upper side.

Standard signs were placed on Union street from Spring to Patton streets informing motor owners as to parking restrictions and others were placed on Market street from Main to Patton to acquaint the motoring public with the law.

Officers Elected By Hi-Y Club

The Hi-Y Club of the Danville High school held its last meeting last Friday and elected the following officers: John Weber, president; Robbie Yealls, secretary; and Earl Rucker, treasurer. The vice-president will be elected next fall.

Upon these officers will rest the responsibility of opening the work of the club at the beginning of the school term next fall. The past season has been one of considerable activity and the Hi-Y Club slogan, "Clean athletics, clean scholarship, clean speech and clean living," became familiar to all high school students.

The club will use over one-half of its members who were among the graduating class this year but expects to recruit still larger numbers from the new juniors who will be eligible for membership when the school opens in September.

MISS HOPPER TO TELL SECRETS OF ETERNAL YOUTH

It's not an easy thing to interview a woman that looks like she's 19 and really is 60. Usually the 19-year-old damsel proves a stumbling block to the reporter who thinks she is kidding for a fall—a hard one; but when a woman's sixty, with all the natural wiles and charm of the age, and added to that the accumulated wisdom of the years, there is no telling what the poor reporter is in for.

With a temerity that angels have subdued, a reporter essayed the task of interviewing last night Edna Wallace Hooper, at the Broadway, here for a two-day engagement, (yesterday and today). When the reporter arrived for the interview with Miss Hooper who is here to tell the ladies of the city how to preserve their youth and beauty, she was in her dressing room waiting for the time for her second evening appearance on the stage. She certainly looks nineteen, she talks with the interest and vivacity of that age, but she admits she's sixty, so it goes without saying she is just that old.

Miss Hooper has led an active and interesting life, and she talks well on a number of topics. She is deeply interested in flying and in motoring—in sports of all kinds. She is interested in people and places. She said last night that this was her second visit to Danville, having appeared here nearly a score of years ago in "Jumping Jupiter." She remembered how the town looked then and how it looks today and she commented upon the many improvements that have been made. She is a most interesting woman, or is.

NEW SENATOR PLAYS ROLE OF UNCLE SAM TO SALVE CITIZENS

By EDWARD THIERRY
(Special to The Bee.)

NEW YORK, June 2.—What problems of government is Mr. John Copeland interested in most?

"Those things," says Senator Royal S. Copeland, "which he kicks about most. I know, because I have opened a Senatorial Kicking Bureau."

And these, Copeland finds, are the four chief problems in the eyes of the average citizen who has kicks against the government:

1. Immigration.
2. Soldier's welfare.
3. Tariff.
4. Prohibition.

"Yes, in the order named," said the new junior senator from New York. "Lots of other things, too. It's amazing how many people have kicks against the government."

Dr. Copeland—he says he'd rather be called Doc than Senator—shocked politicians, as well as citizens, so unaccustomed to such public service, by opening an office in a Broadway skyscraper for the sole purpose of receiving people who want to talk about their troubles.

Room 2262, Fisk Building, has this unostentatious inscription: "Royal S. Copeland, Walk In." It isn't his medical office, for that's uptown at his house, where he puts in a couple of hours each morning seeing patients. At 4 he is at Room 2262, and until 6 he works as a United States senator, eating luncheon off a leaf of his desk.

Explain Why Street Is Crooked

Do you know why Main street is so crooked? Well, The Chatterbox, the high school weekly, in the last edition undertakes to explain its history along with other interesting facts about Danville. But let it tell the story.

Years ago it was only a path leading down to the river where pigs and cattle went to water. So Main street was laid off just as the pigs had gone. For the story goes that there was still up the river the pigs went there for the refuse. Then when they wanted water after their meals they had to stagger as best they could to the river.

"Later Main street was a section of the principal highway from Greensboro, and the mail stage came weekly along this road. Then, there was a pretense of paving of the streets and whatever sidewalks there were, only strips of plank.

"West Main, Virginia Avenue, College avenue and the streets that now boast the best residence were then in woods, fields or hills.

"On Craghead, Main, Wilson and Lynn were the most pretentious homes of the earliest days. Later Sutherland, Holbrook, Stokes, Green, Washington, Worsham, Paxton, Claiborne, Colquhoun, Patton, Jefferson and Thomas added themselves to the list of residential streets. Almost all the streets of the early days were named for prominent men who lived on them.

Holbrook and Sutherland got their names from the first owners of the Memorial Mansion. Craghead was the street on which Doctor Craghead (commonly known as "Doctor Crackhead") lived.

"Lynn, Bridge, Wilson, and Monument streets were residential sections of the city. Monument street received its name in a peculiar but rather interesting way. The people of the city wanted to do something in memory of Mr. Tunstall, who did so much to get the Richmond and Danville railroad here, and they decided to erect a monument on top of the hill, where Monument street is now. However, their plans were not carried out because the Civil War came. After this the street was called Monument street.

"At this time Union street was a separate little village, and was called Mechanicville. It was also called 'Hell's Half-Acre' because it was such a rough settlement.

"The streets of Danville have originated, increased and developed not by any definite plan or survey, but have, as it were, followed the line of least resistance. They have been laid out to suit the fancy or personal advantage of property owners, so as to create the largest number of salable lots. This method caused the many curves and turns and general confusion in the plan of the streets. Some of them make right angles within themselves, for example, Chestnut, Wilson and Jefferson.

"Main street is nearly four miles long, and it is said to be the longest, for the size of the town, in America."

Royalist Plot Threatens France

Engulfs Every Village and City Endangering Life—
Wild Scenes at Chamber of Deputies Meeting.

By HENRY WALES

(Copyright, 1923, Chicago Tribune.)

PARIS, June 1.—A Royalist plot engulfing every province and city throughout France threatens the life of the republic, the cabinet today told the Chamber of Deputies in the midst of scenes almost unprecedented in violence.

Minister of the Interior Manoury, speaking for Premier Poincare in the latter's absence, declared the government will maintain the full extent of its power. Philip the Eighth shall not reign while the republic retains power to administer justice, the minister said.

The cabinet, without its leader, entrusted to M. Manoury the task of combating parliament, which opened at three o'clock this afternoon in a violent turmoil over the Royalist attacks on two Republican deputies and one republican former minister last night.

After four hours and one-half of unrestrained rioting, during which sticks and fists were shaken high in the air and fists fights often began, only to be broken off by guards, the government felt itself shaken.

For the second time within three days the Poincare cabinet had to ask the chamber for a vote of confidence.

Although the leaders of the opposition arose and said the chamber should not overthrow the government during the present Ruhr situation, the vote was only 379 to 191 in Premier Poincare's favor.

Thus M. Poincare loses almost 200 votes from his last Tuesday night's overwhelming majority.

When the session opened the atmosphere was charged with electricity. All parties, from the right center to the extreme left, turned out in full force while the galleries were jammed.

Since Royalists last night attacked three prominent republicans thus employing what their newspaper "Action Francaise" calls fascist methods, all the republican parties have been active.

Three interpellations were put on record in which the government was asked what it intends to do to punish the Royalist brigands and to protect the French republicans from the series of open assaults that have been going on in recent months without the government making any effort to punish the guilty persons.

M. Herriot, mayor of Lyons and the socialist leader, took the tribune amidst the wildest scenes, the entire Left and Center rising and cheering. A part of the parliament attempted to attack the Marshalist but the president of the assembly prevented this.

Previously Leps Daudet, the Royalist leader, on entering the chamber was attacked by indignant socialist deputies but was rescued by guards. M. Daudet, fat and perspiring, amid his twenty-six deputies who the throne of France, while from the were sworn to restore Philip VIII to opposite side of the chamber insults were thrown at him throughout the evening's uproar.

Mr. Herriot in the course of an hour's speech was hardly able to finish a sentence before applause would break out in order to drown the Royalist's protests. Mr. Daudet shouted so many interruptions that the president of the chamber finally instructed him to keep still for the rest of the session but he obeyed for only about ten minutes.

M. Herriot outlined the series of outrages that the Royalists have committed since the war, naming the recent attack on former Premier Caillaux at Toulouse and dozens of other ambushes and attempted assassinations.

M. Daudet yelled: "Corrections, you mean. They deserved what they got."

The scene continued riotous, with unbridled passions displayed until six o'clock when the cabinet again called a recess for consultation.

Krassin and Curzon Seem Unable to Agree

(Copyright 1923, Chicago Tribune.)

LONDON, June 1.—(Radio).—The negotiations between the British and Russians for a continuance of the trade agreement is degenerating into something like an act of two back chat comedians, with Lord Curzon and M. Krassin playing the leading roles. Every time they meet it is announced that they have come nearer an amicable arrangement and then one or the other makes an attack on the other. Last night Lord Curzon issued a statement attacking M. Krassin for violating their agreement of secrecy and allowing the alleged summary of the British reply to the last Russian note appear in the Daily Herald. M. Krassin countered this morning by declaring he is responsible for neither the Herald nor the Daily Telegraph, which also published the summary.

M. Krassin tells the Tribune he does not expect the next note from Moscow for a day or two.

HENRY C. LEIGH IS NAMED ON COMMITTEE TO REPLACE MR. MEADE

The name of Julian Meade originally appointed on the conference committee which will strive to work out a solution of the public library matter has been substituted by Henry C. Leigh. Col. A. B. Carrington yesterday authorized that the change be made upon learning that Mr. Meade would be out of the city until the middle of next week and realizing the necessity of prompt action being taken. All of the members of the conference committee are now in town and it was indicated this morning that no time would be lost in holding a meeting. The other two members of the committee are L. B. Conway and M. K. Harris.

BETTER HOMES

June 4th WEEK to 10th

America is gradually becoming a nation of homes. Because of the success of the movement in which nearly 1,000 cities and towns participated in last fall, a second demonstration has been set aside for the week ending June 4th to 10th.

The idea is the outgrowth of a suggestion made by President Harding in 1921. As a part of this campaign communities everywhere prepare model homes and apartments to demonstrate what can be accomplished within a given income.

Indorsing this campaign President Harding said: "I know of no matter so intimately concerned with the life of our people to which we can give greater devotion and service for fundamental improvement than the upbuilding not only of individual home ownership but the actual improvement of our homes." Every concern listed below is intensely interested in this campaign. All of them are ready to offer suggestions or ways and means by which to help make America a nation of better homes.

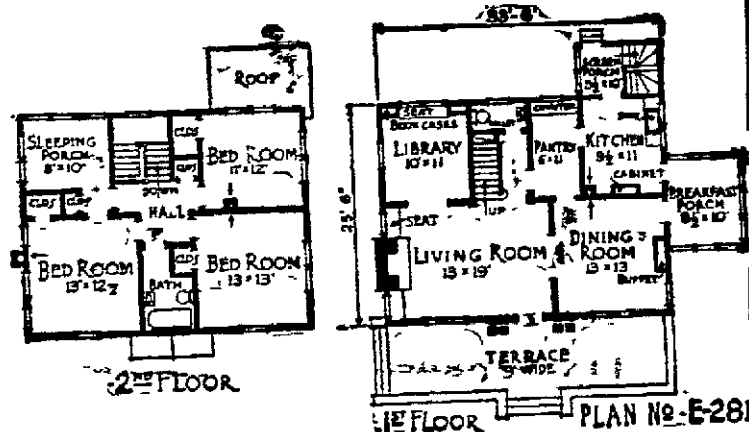

A Roomy Home At Reasonable Cost!

HERE'S a good looking, well planned home for a large family that can be built at a surprisingly low figure. We can supply the plans and give you a careful estimate of the cost.

With Electrical Appliances

WESTINGHOUSE FANS

Will add untold comforts to your home during the coming Summer, and if you are without one, now is a good time to prepare for the coming hot weather by providing a good electric fan for your home or office. We have all sizes Westinghouse and Emerson Fans in stock now for your selection.

WHY NOT AN ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR NOW?

THE KELVINATOR can be fitted in the Refrigerator you are now using. No housewife should be without a Kelvinator this summer—No more sour milk, no more discomforts from like of ice, etc., when you use a Kelvinator.

Kelvinator is the oldest electric refrigerating machine made. Owners who have had their Kelvinators for years will tell you of its dependability and its great efficiency. Kelvinator is so cold that it manufactures dainty cubes of ice for your table. Many women freeze maraschino cherries, sprigs of mint, or violets in these ice blocks. They also make mousses, ices, sherberts, custards and salads, by placing them in the Kelvinator ice trays for a few hours.

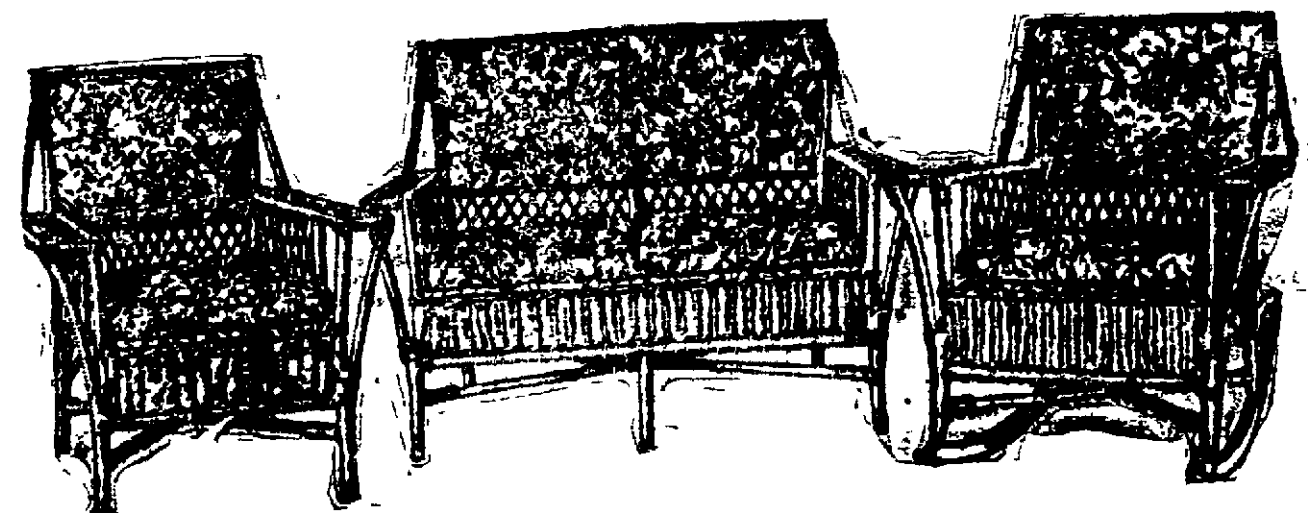

We Will be glad to demonstrate The KELVINATOR any Time.

TWO MEN SHOT TO DEATH IN RAID ON LIQUOR CAR

(By Chicago Tribune Service.)
MADISON, Ga., June 1.—Two men were shot to death by federal officers near here tonight, in an attempt to seize a car in which contraband liquor was being carried, it is alleged.

Harry Galsley, one of the federal officers in a party of three leaped on the running board of the automobile. Two men in the car are said to have turned the fire with an automatic pistol shot and instantly killed both men. The bodies of the dead men have not been identified.

The shooting occurred on the national highway. The officers, Deputy Sheriff Lovejoy of Green County, and Federal Prohibition Officer Sturdivant, accompanied Galsley, working out of Greensboro, Ga., late today. There were 38 gallons of moonshine whiskey in the automobile, the officers stated.

BUILDING CONTINUES
ATLANTA, Ga. June 1.—Building operations continue here at the rate of $2,000,000 in construction monthly. The tendency towards higher wages in the building trades is not so apparent here as in other sections of the country although there is scarcity of workmen. Builders are not inclined to seek speed at extra cost and wait until they can assemble satisfactory forces.

For Boy and Girl Alike

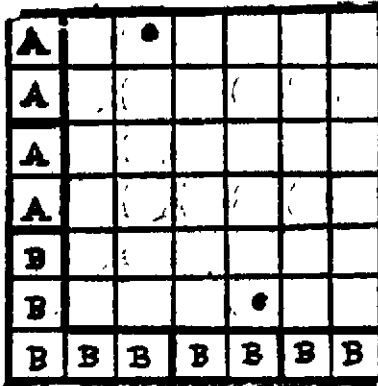

Small boys and girls both are wearing these comfortable summer suits for play this summer. They are shown in a variety of materials—brown and blue chambray with white blouses trimmed with the colored material. All blue, all tan, all linen—whatever the occasion and the hard wear given by active youngsters demand. Match pockets and fringed round collar are attractive trimmings.

Daily Puzzle

If a clock takes six seconds to strike 6, how long will it take to strike 11?

Yesterday's answer—

When the 49 square checker-board is divided into six sections as shown above, the sections may be refitted to form three separate squares, each of a different size. The tiny squares lettered A may be placed together to form a square of four small squares. Those lettered B may be fitted into a square of nine, which leaves the third square of 36.

CREDITORS OF FIRM BEGIN TO ORGANIZE

(By The Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, June 1.—Creditors of Jones and Eaker, leading brokerage house on the New York curb market, which was forced into involuntary receivership yesterday, took steps today to protect their interests by organizing a committee with John A. Neysenhouse, as chairman. The firm had more than nine thousand customers throughout the country, most of them with small accounts. A large force of accountants started the tedious task of going over the books and it was stated that it would be at least two weeks before an accurate estimation could be made of the assets and liabilities. The liabilities have unofficially been estimated to be between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000.

The financial district seethed with rumors today. The most persistent report was that the district attorney's office was investigating a number of other curb market houses, but this was denied by District Attorney Barton.

Another report had it that the private fortune of William R. Jones, principal partner of the concern, which is estimated at between $7,500,000 and $10,000,000, would be secured by the receiver for creditors but there was no confirmation.

Did England Hang an Innocent Woman?

Edith Thompson's Strange Letters Now Reveal Her Dream That She Was Being Pushed from a Steep Precipice---But It Turned Out to Be a Scaffold.

The Beautiful Edith Thompson Who, Having Paid the Death Penalty for Her Husband's Murder Along with Her Lover, Bywaters, Is Now Said to Be Innocent.

During the Trial of Bywaters and Edith Thompson for Murder, Crowds Thronged the Street Outside the Famous Old Bailey Prison.

doubt that filled the minds of millions in England before her death has crystallized into belief in her innocence.

Her letters reveal a woman of strong emotions and considerable intelligence. They first establish the meeting with Bywaters—a chance meeting while the two were riding into London in a tube train, where Mrs. Thompson went each day from her home in the suburbs to work in an office.

She was 29, Bywaters only 21. From the casual flirtation grew friendship; then Bywaters was introduced into the Thompson home. In a few months the two were ardently in love and Mrs. Thompson was crying out in the tie that bound her to her husband.

She and Bywaters tried to avoid seeing each other—that is shown conclusively when she writes, "I can't bear to think of you being in England and not seeing me—must we be so very strict and stern? We're not ordinary human beings, we're apart, different. We've had so few pleasures and so many rebuffs. Any one that is added now makes it harder."

Later came the letters where both she and Bywaters were doubting still more strongly whether their illicit love affair could be continued. And the woman wrote, "I've had such frightful dreams lately about you and me. In one I dreamed that you were pushing me over a steep precipice and I was falling, falling. What can it mean?"

This dream occurred several times later and is commented on in other letters. It came about the time when Edith Thompson's missives took on a tragic note and mentioned poisons which the court understood she meant to use for her husband, but which Lord Beaverbrook thinks she was planning to imbibe or did imbibe in an effort to take her own life.

But if that was her intention she did not succeed, instead going on to the fateful night when her husband was slain. Then came the trial which saw in conclusion her dream coming true—Bywaters had shoved her from a precipice and had gone with her himself in the tragic descent. But the precipice was a scaffold provided by law instead of a rocky crag.

What of the dream describing the fall—was it "mere coincidence." Science takes a different view and Charles Richet of the French Institute, a leading figure in modern psychological research, believes that such dream warnings are sometimes real. He offers a scientific explanation for them.

First of all, he observes that the dream warning or premonition is one that repeats. People who court danger very often dream of that danger and of the sinister results that may happen. While awake they suppress the thought of danger, but when they sleep their subconscious selves warn them in dreams.

"The idea that the human mind cannot foretell the future, even in a waking state," says Richet, "is absurdly misunderstood, and to a certain extent untrue. Frequently we can and do foresee and foretell future events with certainty."

"There is no such thing as actually 'lifting the veil' or projecting oneself forward in time and literally 'seeing' an event which has not yet occurred. But we know the law of cause and effect and can foretell how things are likely to occur."

"I Dreamed You Forced Me Over a Precipice and That I Was Killed in the Fall," Wrote Edith Thompson to Bywaters.

ONLY a few short months ago Edith Thompson was a beautiful young woman living with her good-looking, ex-soldier husband in London—and apparently happy.

But events happened swiftly; her husband was stabbed to death while the two were returning from a theatre together, the young wife was found weeping by his prostrate body. A few days later she was arrested, along with Frederick Bywaters, a friend of hers and her husband.

Jointly they were convicted of the slaying and while millions cried out against it they were hanged. To the last Mrs. Thompson protested her innocence and Bywaters likewise declared she had no share in his guilt. But the British government stood firm, even though a petition carrying a million names begged it to commute Edith Thompson's sentence to life imprisonment and women walked up and down with posters of protest outside the Holloway jail where she awaited death.

And now—? Now Lord Beaverbrook's London Express, one of the powerful English dailies, asserts that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the execution of Edith Thompson. Lord Beaverbrook has obtained possession of the tragic letters which Mrs. Thompson wrote to her lover, Bywaters. These letters were introduced as evidence at her trial—but only in part. Lord Beaverbrook declares that if they had been reproduced in entirety she would have not been convicted.

The letters also reveal another strange thing, a phase of one letter where she tells of dreaming that if she allowed Bywaters to lead her on, he would end by causing her death "in a fall over a precipice." This letter was written long before the murder of her husband was even contemplated.

"It is true," says Lord Beaverbrook, "that she would have rejoiced in the death of her husband and she did love Bywaters. But the law was not concerned with this, but with her complicity in the actual murder."

"The full evidence of her letters should have been put before the court. If they had been it is almost certain a great miscarriage of justice would have been avoided."

Certain passages in the letters read in court certainly gave the impression that Mrs. Thompson had tried to poison her husband, had fed him powdered glass and had asked Bywaters for poison to give him. But James Douglas, editor of The Express, contends that the full text of the letters shows that she wanted the drugs or pills for herself and not for her husband. Douglas concludes:

"If Mrs. Thompson's body is exhumed, it is possible traces of drugs or scars caused by glass may be found. An anguished woman may have taken all sorts of drugs supplied or suggested by Bywaters. She may even have swallowed glass."

Whether the mystery of Edith Thompson's guilt or innocence will ever be solved may rest with the British government. Certainly the Percy Thompson, at Left, the Husband, and Third Member of the Tragic Trio.

Frederick Bywaters. Hanged for Thompson's Murder.

"When we are asleep our subconscious mind is always at work, although we are not aware of it. The subconscious mind is liberated when we dream, as it was in Edith Thompson's case. Here is a typical dream warning. She had ceased to love her husband and she did love Bywaters. Her conscious mind would not allow her to give him up and refused to recognize the dangers involved."

"But her subconscious mind realized that she was embarking on a dangerous intrigue and that something terrible might happen. That subconscious mind feared Bywaters, hence it showed him to her pushing her over the cliff. It provided a real glimpse of the future, as later events proved. And because she would not heed the warning the dream kept recurring."

Then, finally, Edith Thompson was carried half-conscious to the gallows in the yard at grim Holloway jail that gray December morning. Too late then to consider warnings. The questions of motives and her guilt or innocence can now be thrashed out only by legal and scientific minds—without avail.

New Zealand's Challenge to America's Girl Swimmers

Sleek Water Nymphs of This Continent, Having Vanquished Europe's Best, Don the One-Piece, Preparing to Repel New Invaders.

By L. de B. HANDLEY.
Coach of the Women's Swimming Association of New York

OUT in New Zealand six girl swimmers, sleek, graceful champions in form-fitting bathing suits, twinkle and glisten in the sunlight of the Antipodes, dive and swim furiously in competition and do all manner of things necessary in training for a great international contest. And from that far land comes a cry of challenge.

For New Zealand is grooming her six best water queens for a world tour in search of the all-around women's swimming championship. She declares they will vanquish all contenders in competition.

In the tanks and along the beaches of America the native nymphs of championship calibre take up the challenge to their prowess. Their preparations to repel the fair invaders attract the eye and speak well for the health, swimming skill, and beauty of young American womanhood.

A question stirs American lovers of swimming—can the New Zealand girls accomplish their object and win the laurels that the American mermaids now wear, or will the latter remain, as they are now, the greatest women swimmers in the world?

Just how good are these challengers from the Antipodes? American followers of water sports may not know, but according to experts, the foreigners, while they rate high in the international field, do not seriously threaten the supremacy established by our maidens.

The picked New Zealand group is as follows: Gwatha Shand, Pauline Hoeft, Pirri Page, Violet Walrond, Muriel Symes and Kathryn Bristed. Each is youthful and pretty and each is unmarried. Each has shown splendid form and a wealth of endurance in a variety of water sports.

Yet only two have shown championship form and are to be feared by the best among the American swimmers—Gwatha Shand and Pauline Hoeft. American experts do not believe that the Maoriand sextet could vanquish a team chosen from the Women's Swimming Association of New York, and the invaders could not hope certainly to defeat a nationally-selected team.

If one undertakes, in fact, to choose the 12 greatest girl swimmers in the world at present, one discovers that only Miss Shand and Miss Hoeft of the New Zealand nymphs compel recognition as against two British and eight American feminine stars.

For instance, the greatest girl swimmers of modern times are undoubtedly Gertrude Ederle and Helen Wainwright, the 16-year-old marvels of the Women's Swimming Association. Their performances in competition proclaim their superiority.

Miss Ederle has the edge on her clubmate as a free style swimmer, apparently, but the vivid Helen Wainwright excels in other branches of water sports, so she might prove as great a scorer as her teammate, or even greater, in all-around competition.

Last summer Gertrude Ederle placed to her credit the finest free-style feats performed by a woman in 1922. She swam 100 yards straightaway in 1m. 41-5s., equalling the best time returned under any conditions during the year. She shattered a number of world's records, among others lowering the mark for 150 yards in a pool to 1m. 45s., that for 220 yards in open water to 2m. 49-1-5s., and the tank figures for 440 and 500 yards to 5m. 54-3-5s. and 6m. 45-1-5s., respectively. She won the international 3/4-mile swim for the Day Cups from a monster field of 52, which included Miss Wainwright, record holder at one mile, and Miss Hilda James of England, Europe's champion swimmer from the furlong upward. These achievements stamped her peerless.

Miss Wainwright, during the summer also, thrashed 100 yards in a pool in 1m. 6s., and 217 yards outdoors in 2m. 41-1-5s., the latter performance showing clearly that she would have done 220 yards under 2m. 44s. had she completed the distance. At 500 yards and one mile she hung up the fastest times of the twelve-month, covering these courses over 110-yard stretches in 12m. 6-4-5s. and 26m. 44-4-5s., and she finished second in the Day Cup race. At 100 yards back-stroke she did 1m. 20-3-5s., time beaten only by Miss Sybil Bauer of Chicago. More recently she swam 440 yards in a pool in 6m. 6s. Adding that she was a dangerously close runner-up in fancy diving at the Olympiad of 1920, then won the American springboard championship in 1921, it will be seen that she ranks second to none as a potential international scorer.

Another 16-year-old prodigy of the Women's Swimming Association, fully entitled to rating among the dozen world leaders, is Aileen Riggan, present Olympic diving champion. She earned fourth place in the Day Cup fixture, she displayed record speed at 200 and 300 yards in open water, even though team mates have beaten her times since; she stands third in the international group of back-stroke swimmers, with a century in 1m. 21s. to her credit.

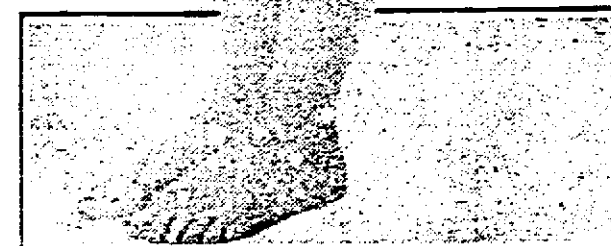

Notwithstanding Miss Riggan's value because of her diving and back-stroke swimming ability, however, it may be concealer that, as free-style contestants, Miss Hilda James of England and Miss Gwatha Shand of New Zealand come next to Miss Ederle and Miss Wainwright. Miss James, who was third in the Day Cup event, is better over long than short courses. While in this country last August she beat listed world's records from 300 to 500 metres in races in which Miss Ederle and Miss Wainwright led her home and set new marks. She negotiated 440 yards around 6m. 12s., as against Miss Shand's best time of 6m. 14-3-5s. Later, at home, she swam 150 yards in 1m. 48s., the second fastest performance ever chronicled. Miss Shand has done the better work at 100 yards, though, her mark of 1m. 5s. being 2-1-5 seconds under the English girl's record.

Miss Mariechen Wehselau, of the Outrigger Canoe Club, of Honolulu, takes place with the top liners at 100 and 220 yards free style. More than once she has crawled the century in 1m. 5s. or a shade under, and her latest time for the furlong is 2m. 50s. flat.

In the same class is Miss Pauline Hoeft of New Zealand. Her middle-distance performances do not stamp her formidable, but she has done 100 yards in 1m. 4-1-5s. and 220 yards in 2m. 51-2-5s.

Miss Sybil Bauer, of the Illinois A. C., of Chicago, commands nomination in virtue of her truly extraordinary back-stroke swimming. The Misses Ruth and Eleanor Smith, twin mermaids of the University of Ohio, deserve to be placed on the international list of headliners because of their remarkable all-around swimming. They are world leaders in breast-stroke swimming.

Constance Jeans, Britain's 100-Yard Champion.

Coming now to the outlook for the possible clash between sextets of New Zealand and American mermaids, it will be seen from the quoted times that only at 100 yards free-style do the Maoriand champions threaten seriously the leadership of our own nymphs. From 220 yards upward, as well as in breast and back-stroke swimming and fancy diving we can line-up for every standard event no less than two, and in most cases three girls able on past performances to defeat New Zealand's best. At 400-yard relay racing, teams of four, the other regulation fixture, the aggregate 100-yard fastest marks of the New Zealand leaders—Misses Hoeft, Shand, Page and Walrond—add up to 4m. 24-1-5s., while the times of speediest home quartet—Miss Ederle, Wehselau, Wainwright, and Ruth Smith—afford a total of 4m. 21-2-5s.

The supremacy of America's water queens will doubtless be maintained.

"Sunny" has been trained at running and swimming as well as boxing. One of his achievements was a race around the quarter-mile track in the municipal stadium at San Diego, fourteen times without stopping. When the boy becomes the least fatigued, however, his father insists that he rest.

How I Raised "The Most Remarkable Boy"

By GEORGE WALKER

I BELIEVE Mrs. Walker and I have the most remarkable boy in America. With less than three years' training at boxing—he is seven years old—he is able to stand up in the ring against older and heavier and more experienced boxers for four rounds and more without tiring. He has lots of endurance, and speed, and can run nearly four miles without stopping, or can run a mile on the cinder track in a shade less than seven minutes. Mrs. Walker and I have made no "scientific" attempt to make a superman of George, Jr. He wins all of his school

WHEN he was nine months old—and that is six years and three months ago—the father and mother of the youngest and most astonishing Samson ever to appear in the annals of bodily prowess, began the work of training him to physical development.

Now day by day in every way Samson, Jr., is growing stronger and stronger! He is growing so very strong that he can send to the mat his brother Raymond, who is six years old; his sisters, Minnie and Martha, eight and nine, one after the other, before so thoroughly walloping his father, Mr. George Walker, that that gentleman is glad to call "Time!"

"Sunny" George Walker, Jr., of San Diego, numbers these athletic feats in his repertoire.

Boxing four rounds without tiring
Wrestling with boys four years his senior

"Sunny's" Capacity
Chest Expansion,
28½ Inches, Three Inches Above Normal.

Running three and a half miles without stopping
Running one mile in seven minutes
Swimming a half-mile
Performing on rings, bars and trapeze
Playing a tune on a punching bag
Carrying his 180-pound father on his shoulders

And Mr. Walker insists that what his boy can do, any youngster in the country may do as well, with just a little training and care on the part of fathers and mothers!

Himself a long-distance runner in Scotland, where he lived before moving to America, and his wife a swimmer in Glasgow, Mr. Walker determined that his children should be as nearly perfect physically as exercise and sunshine would permit.

Accordingly the training of "Sunny," like that of his brother and sisters, began when he was just old enough to learn how to hang on to things. Father and Mother Walker suspended rings on ropes high enough from the floor for the baby to hold on with his hands while his feet dangled above the rug by six inches. The boy would hang by his chubby hands for thirty minutes at a time.

The next degree in training was teaching "Sunny" to stand erect and touch the floor with his fingers without bending his knees. He learned this so well that now he can stand on a box and still rest his finger-tips on the floor!

Tight-wire walking was the next accomplishment. When he was two years old the boy first attempted to stroll across a wire strung in the back-yard of the Walker home. He was on the ground most of the time, but the knowledge of footwork he gained has been a constant aid to him in boxing.

Just before "Sunny" was three years old, his father handed him a pair of boxing gloves and told him to "hit daddy." The youngster squared-off and his fist shot out and so forcibly hit the nose of his father, who knelt to be within reach, that blood flowed freely. It was the boy's first glimmering of understanding of the prize-ring and the beginning of a regular schedule of boxing. No less than four times weekly for four years he has entered the roped square beside the Walker home and boxed with brother, both sisters, or all three of them; in addition to having a round or two with his father! He is a master of scientific "in-fighting" and his sparring partners declare that he "throws a terrific wallop!"

About the only coddling young Samson, Jr., ever has known has taken the form of careful censorship of his meals. Three times a day—and only three times—he has been fed plain, nourishing food. He eats no candy, sweets nor food between meals. Most of his time is spent in the open air, rain or shine, and Daddy Walker encourages him to play running, jumping games that are much like athletic training in themselves.

At night, after a short but stiff workout, there is a shower and rub-down and bedtime is 8 o'clock sharp. Breakfast is served at 6 o'clock.

meets in track and boxing merely because he has trained, not because he is specially endowed with inherent ability.

We started with him before he was a year old. At nine months, he could hang on to rings and ropes like a monkey. We never tried to rush him, though, preferring nature to take its time. We always gave "Sunny" and the other children plenty of time, letting them play at whatever we set about for them to do.

"Sunny" and the other children eat three meals a day and that's all. Candy is pretty much taboo. If they eat candy, nuts or fruits, it is at meal times. We put the children to bed at 8 o'clock and have them up for breakfast at 6.

No sparring partners in the neighborhood will fight "Sunny" now. He's too fast and too hard for them. We had one boy 11 years old, but when I went to get him the other day, he wouldn't go home with me. He had had enough, he said. I have no regular daily program for the boy. He exercises in four bouts every night (one with each of the other children and one with me); then I rub his body until it glows and put him in bed.

I hardly can prescribe a method for other parents to use to train their children as we have trained George, Jr. When he was nine months old, we had him bend his body to touch the floor with his fingers, keeping knees stiff. Tight and slack wire walking followed. He fell off more often than he stayed on. "Sunny" commenced punching the bag at three. Now he can play tunes on it. He is ambidextrous. Sometimes he will start to write something with his right hand, quit for a moment, then return and unconsciously take up the work with his left. His school work has been 100 per cent.

The whole secret of his phenomenal growth, strength and agility lies in clean mental and physical living. I believe all parents can do the same for their children.
